To the Gentlemen and Ladies, &c.

TO Describe the Art of Painting, would be to Epitomize the Histories of most of the Civilized Nations of Europe, in which the Art, as also the Artists, are both Recorded and Transmitted to succeeding Ages with Applause and Commendation. My design at present, is to hint at, rather than to discourse of the advantages that attend this Noble Invention. If any are curious observers of the several parts of Nature, in this they may see it displayed in its liveliest Colours, and Improved in its most Transcendent Beauties: If fond of Fame, a kind of Immortality, behold a Conquest gained over the Grave, and a Victory over Mortality it self. This incomparable Art at the same time informs the Judgment, pleases the Fancy, recreates the Eye, and touches the Soul, entertains the Curious with silent Instructions, by expressing our most Noble Passions, and never fails of rewarding its Admirers with the greatest Pleasures, so Innocent and Ravishing, that the severest Moralists, and Morosest Stoicks cannot be offended therewith, so refin'd, that the Repetition occasions new Delights, and the most solid Entertainments. In a word, it remains hitherto undetermined, whether the Effects of the Pen, or that of the Pencil, have most obliged Mankind; the one, it's confess Exhibits the Sentiments of the Understanding, the other truly represents the Lineaments of the mind, in the Portraitsures of the Persons. To these Transient Remarks, I might add the Testimony of Sacred Story, both as an Argument of the Esteem that Painting was in amongst the Jews; as also, that it was reckon'd by them none of the least Infelicities that they were threatned with, viz. to be deprived of their pleasant Pictures.

To conclude, when I first Essay'd this way of selling Paintings and Limnings by Auction, I propounded to my self the obliging of the Gentry, Citizens, &c. and to bring it into Esteem and Reputation, to make it familiar and acceptable; and withal, an honest gain to my self. And as I am bound publickly to own, so I will upon all opportunities freely acknowledge, that the Worthy Gentlemen, &c. the Buyers, have both by their Presence and Custom, promoted and encouraged it. And that I may remove the Prejudices of some, and the Misapprehensions of others, as to the sincerity of the Management, I have Printed the Conditions of Sale with an additional one, that no Person or Persons shall be admitted to bid for his, or their own Pictures, &c. for I will, and cannot omit to aver, that the Gratifying of my Customers with moderate Pennyworths in the things I sell, was one of the Principal Motives that gave rise to the attempt, and is the most probable way to continue it, which having (without Vanity be it said) in some measure effected, I do not in the least repent, (that for your sakes, Gentlemen) I have hitherto extended and exercised my Lungs.
